Sugar and the McKinley Tariff.

Tariff reform shouters in the last Congress went on record as opposed to putting sugar on the free list. With customary inconsistency one-half their speeches were devoted to denunciation of tariff protection as a scheme to advance the price of articles to consumers, while as many more were in opposition to the removal of the tariff on sugars for the alleged reason that consumers would not get any benefit therefrom.

How does all this correspond with the facts as subsequently developed? Has anything occurred to add lustre to the fame of these gentlemen as political seers, or to invite tolerance of their future claims to dictate the economic policy of the country? They insisted that prices would not come down; but prices have been so materially reduced that granulated sugar has been advertised to retail in Chicago at three and a half cents per pound. They further insisted that encouragement by bounty would not increase domestic manufacture of sugar; but reliable statistics forthcoming in less than three months after the law took effect show that the output of cane sugar will be augmented as rapidly as time and money can develop it, while an acreage of Western farm lands never before approached in extent insures for the sugar beet a prominence in future agriculture the significance of which is beyond estimation.

Another important feature schedule of the McKinley law, for the repeal of which the party espousing tariff reform hastens to re-pledge itself on every occasion, is the provisional clause for reciprocity of trade with foreign nations. Under pressure of the power thus placed in the hands of the national executive, barriers against the admission of products of this country to South American and West Indian markets have already been lowered, while negotiations now well advanced promise at an early day to give American hog products free access to the markets of Germany and France along the beet sugar route.

These are some of the facts which the free trade attorneys find it convenient to ignore while drumming for recruits Cleveland express his private opinion for a general crusade against the exist- of the free coinage plank in the Ohio ing tariff law. They have no words of Democratic platform. congratulation over the probability that some portion of the more than $80,000, 000 last year paid to foreigners for sugar may hereafter be kept within reach of work in this place in good shape. the farmers who grow beets and cane, and the workers who make sugar, how- Pennsylvania to visit his mother. ever much these may need such addition to their resources. Their anxiety 331 bushels of wheat per acre from 40 rather goes out toward the Spanish acres. dons and European landlords whose fields supplied the material, and the owners of steamships that transported the two billion pounds of foreign sugar last year sold in the United States.

Such attitude appeals neither to the sound business sense nor the patriotism of voters; and until these characteris- ed to $656. He put in ten months' time tics cease to dominate American legislation, self-styled "reformers" are likely to work in vain for the advent of that directed.

The Census Office has issued a bulletin giving in detail the population of the state of Michigan. The population of the state under the census, as taken June 1, 1890, is 2,093,889, while in 1880 the population was 1,638,937, an increase in ten years of 456,952 or 27.92 per cent. In 1880 Montmorency and Oscoda counties were unorganized and were attached as townships to Alpena and Alcona counties respectively. Since then they have been organized and appear separate and distinct as counties. The following new counties have been organized since 1880: Alger in 1885, from Schoolcraft; Arenac, in 1882, from Bay; Gogebic in 1887 from Ontonagon; Iron in 1885 from Marquette and Menominee, and Lewis in 1887 from Chippewa and Mackinac. When parts of counties have been taken to form new counties the population according to the census of 1880 of that part taken is deducted from the population in 1880 of the county from which it was taken whenever possible, and is set over against the population of the new county for 1890, as in this way comparisons to show growth are more accurately made. Fifteen counties in the state show decreases, most of which are small, while fourteen counties show increases of more than 100 per cent. Thirty-eight counties show increases of more than 50 per cent.
